Frequently Asked Questions

1. QUESTION:

Is it more common for pink sheets or BB penny stocks to move to nasdaq?
Which one is better and more regulated as well

o ANSWER:

2. QUESTION:

Who or what determines the market price of pink sheet penny stocks?

o ANSWER:

As in regulated markets, the price of the security is determined by the market itself. As in a regular market, the quoted market is always the highest bid and the lowest offering.

For Pink sheet stocks, major firms "route" their orders to firms that they know trade in securities that are listed in the pink sheets. Firms will change their routing depending on the volume and the execution of the orders.

Firms that have "open" orders in pink sheet stock will "route" them to the firms they think will execute the order in that market.

If there are no quoted markets for a given stocks, those firms will "publish" their bid and/or offering in the sheets. Most of these orders are orders received from major firms who do not (or will not) themselves trade the pink sheets.

Many time in the sheets you will see either "offer wanted" or "bid wanted. These are firms that have an order either to buy or sell and are looking for another side.

Most major firms do not like to participate with pink sheet stocks, so they route them to firms that will enter orders in such a market. There are only a handful of firms that major firms will route their orders to but those firms do not usually deal with the public.

3. QUESTION:

What are Pink Sheet Penny Stocks?

I'm from Australia where we only have one stock exchange. I'd like to know what "Over the Counter" and "Pink Sheets" means for penny stocks. Surely they are traded electronically like any other stock? Does it automatically mean they are small cap? Are there any stocks under on the S&P 500? Why aren't they called penny stocks? What exchange are stocks under traded on? Where is a good place to find info on stocks between 50c and that are liquid? Is there a good advisory service? Thanks in advance...

o ANSWER:

The pinksheets are a separate unregulated electronic market. Technically the definition of a penny stock is one trading under five dollars. If they trade under a dollar for a certain period of time they are subject to being delisted from the New York Stock Exchange and Nasdaq. Then they are usually traded in the pinksheets or the Over The Counter Bulletin Board.

4. QUESTION:

Investing in Penny Stocks / Pink Sheets risky ? Easy money ?

o ANSWER:

Easy money?

When was the last time you noticed people leaving bills all over the place in your world? 0's? Just giving money away?

Isn't it far more common to encounter situations that sound like a really good deal but turn out to not so good a deal in actual fact? Or even a complete ripoff?

This is life.

Penny stocks and pink sheets are ripoffs and scams. Plain and simple.

5. QUESTION:

What is an good site to use for buying penny stock(pink sheets)?

Looking to invest 0-0

o ANSWER:

Say good bye to your money first.

99% of penny stocks lose money and go out of business. Why do you think they are worth only pennies.

Being on the pink sheets also means that the companies do not have to do any kind of financial reporting. So what are you basing your investments on? Thin air? A hot tip?

If your trade costs , then a round trip costs ... Do some math and decide how much your investment needs to go up just to break even.

Not telling you not to invest.. just want you to be aware you entering an arena of big dollars manipulating the markets with short selling and other techniques. It is the wild wild west with very little oversight.

Have fun.
